

Brains and heart. That's how people describe David N. Deutsch & Company.

Brains. In identifying and articulating your company's many attributes and value, building better "books", disseminating information confidentially, targeting the right prospective acquirors, approaching them in the most compelling way, conducting better management meetings, utilizing transaction structure to bridge the bid/ask gap. And, knowing when to push and when to accept winning transactions and close.

Heart. In caring for our clients, their families and their fellow shareholders, helping them achieve corporate and personal objectives, and maintaining relationships long before (and after) transactions. And, in doing the right thing.

Brains and heart add value and increase probability of transaction closure.
